Oyster farmer Kevin Lunny has asked the U.S. Supreme Court to review his case against the U.S. Park Service to renew the lease for his oyster farm that operates on Drakes Estero which is on federal land and Congress has designated as a marine wilderness. Recently, the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled against an injunction sought by Lunny to stay in business following former Interior Secretary Ken Salazar's decision to not issue a new operational permit and extend the lease of the land for the oyster company. The Park Service and conservationists argue that Lunny's operations are destroying eelgrass beds, and his farm is too close to the area used by harbor seals for reproducing. Lunny reportedly responds that his farm is 'the epitome of sustainable food production,' and oysters have improved the water quality by filtering out particulate matter as they feed and were helping the eelgrass to flourish since the early 90's. Drakes Bay Oyster Co. produces over 300,000 oysters and about one million Manila clams each year, reportedly, 85 percent of shellfish grown in Marin County. (Photo by Justin Sullivan/Getty Images)

660	VA0001946281	451985886	Oyster Farmers Begin To Wind Down Operations After Feds End Nat'l Seashore Lease	INVERNESS, CA - JULY 10: A Drakes Bay Oyster Co. worker checks a strand of oysters on Drakes Estero on July 10, 2014 in Inverness, California. After a 19 month legal battle with the federal government, Drakes Bay Oyster Co. is beginning to wind down operations a week after the U.S. Supreme Court rejected an appeal by Drakes Bay Oyster owner Kevin Lunny. Lunny had asked the Supreme Court to review his case against the U.S. Park Service to renew the lease for his oyster farm that operates on Drakes Estero which is on federal land and Congress has designated as a marine wilderness. The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals had ruled against an injunction sought by Lunny to stay in business following former Interior Secretary Ken Salazar's decision to not issue a new operational permit and extend the lease of the land for the oyster company. The Park Service and conservationists argue that Lunny's operations are destroying eelgrass beds, and his farm is too close to the area used by harbor seals for reproducing. Lunny reportedly responds that his farm is 'the epitome of sustainable food production,' and oysters have improved the water quality by filtering out particulate matter as they feed and were helping the eelgrass to flourish since the early 90's. Drakes Bay Oyster Co. produces over 300,000 oysters and about one million Manila clams each year, reportedly, 85 percent of shellfish grown in Marin County. (Photo by Justin Sullivan/Getty Images)

723	VA0001946281	452986096	Drakes Bay Oyster Company Marks Closing After Feds Deny Use Of Federal Lands	INVERNESS, CA - JULY 31: Drakes Bay Oyster Co. worker Andrea Perone hangs the California state flag from a sign on the final day of retail and canning operations at the Drakes Bay Oyster on July 31, 2014 in Inverness, California. After a 19 month legal battle with the federal government, Drakes Bay Oyster Co. is closing the doors on its retail and canning operations after the U.S. Supreme Court rejected an appeal by Drakes Bay Oyster owner Kevin Lunny. Lunny had asked the Supreme Court to review his case against the U.S. Park Service to renew the lease for his oyster farm that operates on Drakes Estero which is on federal land and Congress has designated as a marine wilderness. The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals had ruled against an injunction sought by Lunny to stay in business following former Interior Secretary Ken Salazar's decision to not issue a new operational permit and extend the lease of the land for the oyster company. The Park Service and conservationists argue that Lunny's operations are destroying eelgrass beds, and his farm is too close to the area used by harbor seals for reproducing. Lunny reportedly responds that his farm is 'the epitome of sustainable food production,' and oysters have improved the water quality by filtering out particulate matter as they feed and were helping the eelgrass to flourish since the early 90's. Drakes Bay Oyster Co. produces over 300,000 oysters and about one million Manila clams each year, reportedly, 85 percent of shellfish grown in Marin County. (Photo by Justin Sullivan/Getty Images)

Residents from one section of the favela, visited by Pope Francis in July 2013, have been affected by construction from an improvement works project begun in 2008. A full sanitation system has yet to be built. Some have been evicted from the area as Rio prepares for the 2014 FIFA World Cup and Rio 2016 Olympic Games. Children living in the affected area have been injured from playing in the rubble while complaining of breathing problems from dust and stomach aches. One child contracted Dengue fever twice and family members believe it was caused by stagnant water in the construction area. (Photo by Mario Tama/Getty Images)

The homes were thought to have been knocked down for a parking lot for the stadium, though that has yet to be built. The area has seen some people occupy certain dwellings. Evictions and demolitions have been occurring in Rio favelas ahead of the 2014 FIFA World Cup and Rio 2016 Olympic Games in spite of a housing shortage in the city. Rio's housing and urban planning goals include a planned five percent reduction of areas occupied by favelas by 2016. Alternative affordable housing, generally on the peripheries of the city, is unable to meet demand and some residents complain they have not received adequate compensation for demolished homes. The families, many with small and sick children, have no shelter and little water and food. The displacement camp Khazair is now home to an estimated 1,500 internally displaced persons (IDP's) with the number rising daily. Tens of thousands of people have fled Iraq's second largest city of Mosul after it was overrun by ISIS (Islamic State of Iraq and Syria) militants. Many have been temporarily housed at various IDP camps around the region including the area close to Erbil, as they hope to enter the safety of the nearby Kurdish region. 2876	VA0001953358	452108678	Idaho Town Awaits Return Of Taliban Hostage Bowe Bergdahl	HAILEY, ID - JULY 13: A banner hangs outside a store window, one of the few public displays of support for freed Afghan POW Bowe Bergdahl remaining downtown in his hometown on July 13, 2014 in Hailey, Idaho. Yellow ribbons that lined Hailey's Main Street constantly for the nearly five years Bergdahl was held captive are now mostly gone as are most of the signs of support that appeared in the store windows along the street after the town learned of his release. The national euphoria following Bergdahl's release quickly faded as a bitter debate ensued over whether he had deserted his post and whether his freedom was worth the risk of swapping five high-level Taliban prisoners being held in U.S. custody at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba. A celebration scheduled for June 28, in Hailey was cancelled over security concerns after the town received hundreds of complaints and threats of protest. Bergdahl, who has been getting help reintegrating to life after captivity at Fort Sam Houston in Texas, has not yet returned to Hailey. (Photo by Scott Olson/Getty Images)

2940	VA0001953359	467968672	Corpus Christi Unsettled By Plunging Oil Prices	CORPUS CHRISTI, TX - MARCH 28: A homeless man looks for donations along a highway entrance on March 28, 2015 in Corpus Christi, Texas. Texas, which in just the last five years has tripled its oil production and delivered hundreds of billions of dollars into the economy, is looking at what could be a sustained downturn in prices. Crude oil prices today are almost 60 percent lower than they were six months ago. While the economy in Texas has become more diversified over the years, oil is still the states largest monetary generator and any sustained downturn would be devastating for employment and the economy. Outplacement firm Challenger, Gray & Christmas this month said a drop in oil prices have been responsible for 39,621 job cuts in the first two months of the year. 3056	VA0001953360	462878624	Boom Goes Bust: Texas Oil Industry Hurt By Plunging Oil Prices	MIDLAND, TX - FEBRUARY 06: A billboard promotes the oil industry along a road in Midland on February 6, 2015 in Midland, Texas. As crude oil prices have fallen nearly 60 percent globally, American communities dependent on oil revenue prepare for hard times. Texas, which benefited from hydraulic fracturing and the shale drilling revolution, tripled its production of oil in the last five years. The Texan economy saw hundreds of billions of dollars come into the state before the global plunge in prices. Across the state drilling budgets are being slashed and companies are notifying workers of upcoming layoffs. According to federal labor statistics, around 300,000 people work in the Texas oil and gas industry, 50 percent more than four years ago. (Photo by Spencer Platt/Getty Images)

In this photo illustration, a RadioShack telephone is shown on February 8, 2015 in Westport, Connecticut. RadioShack, which filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection last Thursday, represented an older era of home electronics and consumer items. Despite numerous attempts to keep with the times, the home electronics retailer couldn't compete in an era of Amazon and Apple. RadioShack was started in 1921 to supply equipment for amateur or ham radio enthusiasts. At its height, the company grew to have thousands of stores throughout America parts of Europe and South America. (Photo illustration by Spencer Platt/Getty Images)

The family was waiting for test results to know if he died of Ebola. The results later came back negative. Contact tracer coordinators have been key to reducing the spread of Ebola, as they locate everyone who has come in contact with an infected person and then monitor them for signs of the illness for 21 days. The cemetery, operated by USAID-funded Global Communities, has buried almost 300 people in its first month of operation, with increasingly fewer of the bodies coming from Ebola Treatment Units (ETUs), as infection rates decline. The cemetery, where burial team members wear protective clothing (PPE), has been seen in Monrovia as a major achievement, as families of deceased loved ones are permitted to view the burials, important in Liberian culture. In an effort to control the Ebola epidemic in 2014, the Liberian government had ordered the cremation of all deceased in the capital, often further traumatizing surviving family members and unintentionally encouraging many families to hide their dead for secret burials. The UN agency, with funding from USAID, says it plans to produce some 10,000 of the kits to be distributed to more than 5,000 districts around Liberia. The kits include buckets, thermal gun thermometers with batteries, soap, backpack sprayers, boots, gloves, chlorine, cloths, brushes and lists of protocols. Although schools are scheduled to reopen Monday, February 2, many have not been cleaned nor have adequate supplies since they were closed last March due to the Ebola epidemic. The reopening of schools is considered a major step in the country's return to normalcy as health authorities come closer to eradicating the virus. (Photo by John Moore/Getty Images)

3627	VA0001954182	462482254	Notorious Brazilian Prison Strives For Reform	SAO LUIS, BRAZIL - JANUARY 27: Inmates stand in their cell in the Pedrinhas Prison Complex, the largest penitentiary in Maranhao state, on January 27, 2015 in Sao Luis, Brazil. Previously one of the most violent prisons in Brazil, Pedrinhas has seen efforts from a new state administration, new prison officials and judiciary leaders from Maranhao which appear to have quelled some of the unrest within the complex. In 2013, nearly 60 inmates were killed within the complex, including three who were beheaded during rioting. Much of the violence stemmed from broken cells allowing inmates and gang rivals to mix in the patios and open spaces of the complex. Officials recently repaired and repopulated the cells allowing law enforcement access and decreasing violence among prisoners, according to officials. Other reforms include a policy of custody hearings and real-time camera feeds. According to officials there have been no prisoner on prisoner killings inside the complex in nearly four months. Critics believe overcrowding is one of the primary causes of rioting and violence in Brazil's prisons. Additionally, overcrowding has strengthened prison gangs which now span the country and control certain peripheries of cities including Rio de Janeiro, Sao Paulo and Sao Luis. Brazil now has the fourth-largest prison population in the world behind the U.S., Russia and China. The population of those imprisoned had quadrupled in the past twenty years to around 550,000 and the country needs at least 200,000 new incarceration spaces to eliminate overcrowding. A vast increase in minor drug arrests, a dearth of legal advice for prisoners and a lack of political will for new prisons have contributed to the increases. (Photo by Mario Tama/Getty Images)
